GALATA'S STORY

GALATA'S STORY

We are in Galata, one of the most central points of the city, which has been home to countless civilizations since the earliest times of history, in Istanbul, the capital of the world. This district, whose name we bear, is located at the intersection of the Halic and the Bosphorus, which Westerners call the "Golden Horn".

Galata, which is one of the oldest settlements in Istanbul and recorded as the 13th of the 14 districts of the city during the Romans, was opened to the settlement of Genoese merchants from Italy in the 13th century. Many beauties dating back to today, such as the port that connects the city with the world, the focus of trade networks and brand new buildings, and the Galata Tower, date from that time.

GALATA'S STORY

Continuing to be the center of trade after the conquest of Istanbul in 1453, Galata also became the center of tolerance. Franks, Levantines, Greeks, Jews, Armenians, Turks and Muslims lived together in Galata for centuries.

The modernization process of the Ottoman Empire began in the Galata region. The first municipal services, the first horse-drawn tram, the world's second metro, Tunnel, and the first electric tram started operating in Galata. The first street lamps in the city, the first company signs were placed here. A favorite of travelers, bankers and international traders with its modern look, Galata became the center of money with the settlement of the most famous banks of the period.
